To find text in Word Doctor to find text in Word, you need to access the navigation pane. You can do this by selecting Search in the Edit group of home tab. An alternative way to access this pane is by using the Ctrl+F shortcut key on Windows or command +F related on mac: how to search for text inside any file using navigation pane, open with navigation pane, enter the text you want to search for. The number of examples that appear in the document will be displayed. You can navigate through search results by selecting the up and down arrows at the bottom of the search box or by clicking directly on the result snippet in the Navigation Pane. The installation of advanced search features is the warning with the basic search function that it doesn't take into account as many things as the case of letters in text. This is a problem if you are searching for a document that contains a lot of content, such as a book or thesis. You can fix these details by going to the Edit group of the Home tab, select the arrow next to Search, and select Advanced Find from the drop-down list. The Search and Replace window will appear. Select More. In the Search Options group, see the box next to the options you want to enable. Now, the next time you search for text in Word, the search will work with the selected advanced options. RELATED: Microsoft Word: Document formatting is an important part of the history of mandatory Union Pacific 90 Steam development and is protected by one of only three three-cylinder steam locomotives. ©2015 Ryan C. Kunley, licensed for About.com, Inc. George Stephenson invented the predecessor steam locomotive of modern trains in 1814. Stephenson, who works in the coal mining industry after 10 months of tampering, designed his first train, named Bluecher. Stephenson's track was just 450 feet long, but his engine carried eight loaded coal wagons weighing 30 tons at about 4 mph. Since then, trains have been an integral part of world and U.S. history. History.com notes: Trains North helped win the Civil War. The world's first travel agency got its start thanks to a train trip. The railways gave us standardized time zones. Miles of rail track in the United States reached its peak in 1916 (with about 400,000 miles). As of 2014, there were still more than 160,0 miles of train tracks in the U.S., with each mile generating more than $820.0 a year, according to the rail service.
